

Living or creating according to your own conscience. Do you have the knowledge, have you seen the person in question commit a crime? In that case, you don't need evidence. Evidence needs bystanders, the courts. Or you saw something good happen. How do you prove it to other people? Talk about it, provide evidence, or otherwise waste time, energy, and mood. However, as a witness, I don't need proof! And that's the point. Let's skip the obligation to testify in court. However, each person has knowledge at their level and in their environment. Who they are, what they do, how they behave. So why not act on it? I can't prove to other people that this person acted right or another acted wrong. But I know! That's the important thing. I can refuse without giving a reason. Based on my conscience. Or to say among people the reason - such and such happened, then I have to give evidence. If I don't, I can be accused of dishonour. And that's what it's all about. Why spread wickedness among people, or why hinder good conduct? Because of the ignorance of those involved. In a society that is convinced of the "goodness" of an individual, it is hard to reject a person I know to be a deceiver or a criminal. Even if I don't give a reason for my rejection, I will at the very least be considered a freak by mainstream society. And that society may exclude me from its midst. And here is the stark exam - what to do. We have two extremes - let it go, then someone will find out. Or go away immediately and complain about the majority "crazy" society. The hardest thing to do is to realize - I know what happened, who is who. So cooperate further, but conditionally. I have free choice and I can influence the society to know the real situation. I can prepare, I can set up situations that will help other people to know. Yes - this is already difficult, not to accept the public opinion and to work quietly. People don't want to do that. If there are more people who live in accordance with their conscience, even a close majority, then the deceivers, the apathetic, the aggressive, the liars, the criminals, they don't stand a chance here - and that without any evidence and subsequent trials.

The absurd thing is that those ignorant and apathetic people then complain about how the evil in society can be allowed by G-d, and if G-d were, there would be no evil. And that they, by their ignorance, indifference, disinterest, give evil (sin) free license to spread among people, they no longer care. They cannot escape the cross of IHS and then they learn why G-d commits them.
